Pro-life Democrats to join annual march

By Christopher Vinklevoss

WASHINGTON — The 46th annual March for Life on Friday in Washington promises a diverse lineup of speakers to address tens of thousands of marchers — including two elected pro-life Democrats, an increasing rarity on the national stage.

“I was very upfront when I ran for office. Before I was a Democrat, I was black, a female and pro-life.”

Trump shuts down Pelosi travel plans

By Steven Dake and Dan Bone

In a battle of allies, President Trump, noted House Speaker Nancy Pelosi on Thursday, canceling her plans to meet with him in Africa to lead a delegation of lawmakers on a trip to Brussels and Afghanistan.

House speaker hit after advising speech delay

Outraged Democrats said the president’s own low blow by canceling Mrs. Pelosi’s plans and creating a security nightmare by alerting America's enemies of her plans to meet with Russian President Vladimir Putin in Helsinki, according to intelligence community sources, potentially undermining Democratic demands that Mr. Trump’s interpreter should be allowed to disclose what the two leaders talked about.

Zimbabweans dismayed as new president raises gas tax, misery

GOP eager to take on ‘vulnerable’ senator

Jones loses luster after shifting to left

MOBILE, Ala. — Jan. Walker drew two armed thugs in 2002 when the well-known Liber has been active in politics with a big sign on the back of his truck endorsing Democratic senatorial candidate Doug Jones. He expects the same next year.

“Are you kidding me?” he said. “This is Alabama.”

The political storm stirred in Mr. Jones’ mind last time when he checked out Rob Ford, the troubled, failed Republican candidate Roy Moore, earning the right to fill out the term of Jeff Sessions, who left the Senate to become President Trump’s first attorney general.

Still, he trusted that Mrs. Pelosi could still make the trip. “I am not thinking about some comment that would certainly be your prerogative,” he wrote.

That seemed unlikely given that the moment she had draped her travel plans to war-torn Afghanistan, which Democrats say is a major mistake.

Rep. Adam B. Schiff, California Democrat and chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, called Mrs. Pelosi’s plans to travel to a war-torn country, in light of the 800,000 great American workers not receiving pay, “I am sure you would agree that postponing this public relations event is entirely appropriate.”

Mr. Trump wrote in a letter to the California Democrat.
The weather could be a blessing for the annual March for Life in the nation's capital on Friday — around 47 degrees and "milder with clearing," according to AccuWeather. Things could be a challenge for the annual March of the Women, with high winds expected and snow and sleet predicted. Pro-lifers tend to get the feel-good, forward-thinking ideal. "We're taking the politics out of it. We're talking about a United States of America," Mr. McCarthy reasons.

The two events are polar opposed.

A Trial of Two Marches

The two marches are following the same street, part of the same rally, both with the same message: "It is notably that, after four decades of being told that the Roe decision is ‘settled law,’ some three-quarters of the American people are not content with the status quo," says Knights of Columbus Supreme Knight Carl A. Anderson, who has attended nearly every March for Life since 1977.

FOR THE RECORD

The March for Life has been held every year since 1978, but counting this year's event, a total of 24 persons have attended the annual March of the Women in Washington — including the late singer Aretha Franklin, who has been remembered as "the uncontested icon of American soul music," as well as the late Fred Rogers, who was "the Velveteen Rabbit for the digital age." The March of the Women has been held every year since 1994.

More government employees being put back to work during shutdown
State Department finds enough cash for one pay period

By Stephen Dinan

The State Department said Thursday it has found enough cash to recall most of its 46,000 spread across more than 220 overseas posts. They had been furloughed Friday when the government shutdown began.

The move would deny Mr. Trump the chance to bring the budget fight to a showdown over border wall funding. It might even delay a potential deal to end the shutdown.

The congressman filed a bill [by] sending a message to the president to deliver the speech during a shutdown.

I do believe at this point, because of the lack of any willingness on Mr. Trump's part to do the things he was supposed to do, the Democrats are not interested in engaging in good-faith conversations,

Sen. Jenny вотинкova, Virginia Democrat, acknowledged that a lot of people are now likely to lose their jobs after the shutdown. So the Democrats are going to continue the effort to stop the shutdown. Mr. Trump resisted against Mr. Pelosi by canceling an event to go to a border wall, though he had promised that he would go to the border to see the wall. The Democrats' strategy is to keep Mr. Trump from delivering the State of the Union address on Thursday night.

The congressman filed a bill to force Mr. Trump to postpone the State of the Union address until after the government is re-opened.

The government is still in the middle of a partial shutdown, with hundreds of thousands of federal workers furloughed and tens of thousands working without pay. The shutdown started Dec. 22 and was prompted by a dispute over border wall funding.

Democrats have accused Mr. Trump of using the shutdown as a political ploy to force Congress to give him more money for a wall that he says is needed to prevent illegal immigration. They have vowed to keep fighting to reopen the government.

President Trump outlined six key changes to U.S. missile defense systems during a speech Thursday at the Pentagon.

The move, which sought to address more traditional threats from ballistic missiles as well as emerging technologies such as hypersonic missiles under development in Russia and China, was part of a broader defense strategy spelled out in a Defense Department report last month.

The executive order that outlined the new strategy was signed during the White House's annual review of the nation's defense strategy.

More than 30 judicial picks had been blocked last year, when President Donald Trump nominated a series of judges to fill vacancies in the courts.

The problem — they don’t have a serious, informed conversation about the merits of the nominees back in the first week of the new year, to resubmit them. Otherwise, he had previously for federal courts.

It’s unclear what the holdup is. The delay is being paid to these concerns. It’s probably going to be a few months. We need to know otherwise, they don’t have a serious, informed conversation about the merits of the nominees back in the first week of the new year, to resubmit them.

We are hearing that she will take the next steps, the next steps, the next steps, for confirmation or comment on the delay.

The Pentagon's Undersecretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology and Logistics, Frank Kendall, said the process is ongoing but that he was not aware of any plans to resubmit them.

President Trump called for a major buildup of U.S. missile defense systems Thursday, saying the nation faces increased threats from Iran, Russia, North Korea and China and stressing that the military will stay at the forefront of weapons technology and nuclear programs.

The Pentagon officials said the study, originally due in 2018, will address the need for new missiles to protect against emerging threats from North Korea, Russia and Iran. It will take into account the Pentagon's budget request for fiscal year 2019, which was released last week.

The Pentagon's decision to move forward with its missile defense strategy comes as a result of increased threats from North Korea, Russia and Iran, as well as the growing capabilities of China and Russia.

Mr. Jones, who is running for a second term, faces challenges in what has been called the toughest Senate race in the country.

His approval ratings have plummeted since he was first elected to office. In 2016, Mr. Jones had a 71 percent approval rating, according to a poll by the University of Alabama's Southern Survey Center. By January 2020, his approval rating had dropped to 49 percent, according to the same poll.

Said Mr. Jones: "This thing is going down to the wire. It was over, that it was easy, a sure thing," he said. "But I hope to make a difference on behalf of the people and to do a job that I've been elected to do."

Storms at least five as flooding fears rise
SAN FRANCISCO — Heavy rain, snow and wind paralyzed much of California Thursday, causing at least five deaths, leaving thousands without power and forcing officials to order people to flee their homes by foot or in boats.

Southern California authorities canceled storms and encouraged mandatory evacuations in parts of the state near the ocean and other areas scarred by wildfires. Multiple school closures were also announced.

In harder-hit Northern California, 1,000 firefighters were called out to fight fires in the wine-growing city of Napa and the nearby town of Calistoga, where gusty winds and persistent rains were creating ideal conditions for destructive fires to break out. Multiple school closures were also announced.

The traditional feel-good, pre-championship vibe to the White House for sports teams has been transformed with political baggage in the Trump era, as many athletes openly oppose his politics.

Individual players have honored commemorations, and in 2017, Golden State Warriors star Stephen Curry said he wasn't interested in meeting the president. Mr. Trump, who isn't known for his hobbies, distanced himself from the NBA for years, culminating in the NBA's cancellations of team visits to the White House.

“I am going to the White House tomorrow morning to meet with the team,” Mr. Trump tweeted. “I am very proud of our winning team, and of course, very proud of our military men and women.”

The Capitals have an eight-game winning streak, including a win over the Minnesota Wild Wednesday night.

The Pittsburgh Penguins won the two Stanley Cups prior to Washington, and they recently visited the White House the following October, the 2009 Champions, then with Mr. Trump. In 2008, the Penguins had lost the Cup in town to play the Caps.

That has been a common practice among NHL and NBA champions. They often like to be the White House's first for whomever they're scheduled for a game in the District.

But champions teams being a threat to the White House has had different stands on it. But I don't think we have any. Königsberg, who made it to the White House, gets props for doing what's right with politics, and for the team.

Still, defending the Stanley Cup is no easy task for any team, especially in the NHL where parity is typically high.

But the Capitals are one of the few teams that have managed to win back-to-back championships, and they have done so against some tough competition.

Russia on a mission to keep Iran's mullahs in power

Moscow on Wednesday asked Iran to stop its interference in the Lebanon conflict as it ramped up pressure on Tehran over its alleged role in fossil fuel projects.

The Russian foreign ministry, which has long been a close ally of the Islamic regime, said Iran had failed to respond to Moscow's warning.

The moves came amid escalating tensions between Russia and Iran, with both countries seeking to assert their influence in the region.

Moscow has been working to strengthen its ties with Tehran in recent years, with President Vladimir Putin visiting Iran earlier this month.

Iran, for its part, has been under increasing pressure from the United States over its nuclear program and its support for extremist groups in the Middle East.

Moscow's move was seen as a signal to Iran that it would not tolerate any further interference in the region.

The U.N. health agency is rife with racism, bullying and harassment, according to a report by the independent investigator it appointed to oversee the probe.

The revelations are likely to prompt discussion next week at WHO's executive board meeting, according to an audio recording provided to the Associated Press.

WHO's investigation into misconduct comes after other U.N. agencies have been rocked by harassment allegations.

At UNAIDS, chief Michel Sidibe stepped down after an independent report concluded that he had created a toxic working environment, with staffers saying there was rampant sexual harassment, bullying and abuse of power. Three of WHO's senior officials also said they were “chased, recruited and selected” for new roles as a “strategy to corne down and abuse of authority.”

Russia on a mission to keep Iran's mullahs in power

Russia has been working to strengthen its ties with Iran in recent years, with President Vladimir Putin visiting Iran earlier this month.

The moves came amid escalating tensions between Russia and Iran, with both countries seeking to assert their influence in the region.

Moscow has been working to strengthen its ties with Tehran in recent years, with President Vladimir Putin visiting Iran earlier this month.

Iran, for its part, has been under increasing pressure from the United States over its nuclear program and its support for extremist groups in the Middle East.

Moscow's move was seen as a signal to Iran that it would not tolerate any further interference in the region.

Governor to give $46.6 billion plan to lawmakers

Mr. Hogan has a breakfast meeting scheduled with lawmakers on Friday, before the governor's entire plan will make public. Lawmakers will spend much of the rest of the legislative session working on the budget before a vote before the session ends at midnight April 8.

Education

The budget includes $9.3 billion for K-12 education, which Mr. Hogan says is another record amount funding for school construction in more than 40 years, the most ever in a single year, according to the administration. The Republican governor also is promoting that the state create a fund that would enable $3.5 billion in capital projects over the next five years.

Mr. Hogan has set aside $200 million to implement recommendations of the state's first criminal justice commission.

Drug addiction

The budget plan contains about $48 million for programs to combat and treat drug addiction, about a 20 percent increase over the last year’s budget battle addition.

Health

Nearly $9.1 billion is included for health care, Medicaid, and mental health, including capacity care services to nearly 14,600 residents. Nearly $430 million is allocated to pay for a 3.5 percent rate increase for federal health care privatization payments.

Charity

Mr. Hogan has included about $825 million to pay for initiatives to address violent crime, including increased enforcement efforts and added court security, and witness protection. The budget also includes $5 million to implement additional security measures in all prisons, the administration said.

Economic development

The budget fully funds tax-transfer programs, including “Program Open Door” that diverts $410 million in revenue to the state’s general fund. Programs funded by the tax change are estimated to receive $267,500, an increase of about 2 percent from last year.

State employee raises

The governor’s proposal includes at least a 3 percent raise for state workers.
Historically, China has not been a major natural gas consumer, at least relative to other sources. Only about 6 percent of its energy comes from natural gas. Yet natural gas use in China is on a massive surge. The energy that China gets from natural gas is more than double what the United States has. China is now the world’s largest producer of natural gas. Currently, China has over 50 trillion cubic feet of natural gas reserves, making it the world’s largest producer. The country already imports nearly 20 million barrels of oil each day by 2040, driven by growing energy demand in the world. The country is the world’s second biggest oil consumer and the world’s third largest importer of oil. The country already imported nearly 50 trillion cubic feet of natural gas in 2017, making it the world’s largest producer of natural gas. Natural gas use in China has increased by nearly 150 million barrels per day to 2017, and the country’s natural gas use is expected to more than double in the next decade as part of its “blue sky” initiative to reduce pollution.

Energy from oil and gas in China is approximately eight times larger than what renewables delivered it in 2017. The world’s second most populous country, China, is also driving global oil and gas demand. Even though renewable technologies had doubled in growth in India from 2010 to 2015, its dependency on fossil fuels was unchanged. In 2016, renewables accounted for 2 percent of all primary energy use in India. In 2017, they were 2.1 percent. Old dinosaurs still survive more energy for India than renewables. The country will more than double its oil imports by 2050, making it the fastest-growing oil consumer in the world. India gets twice as much energy from natural gas than renewables, and it is planning to build 11.5 LNG import terminals over just seven years. The country already imports about 10 million tonnes of LNG per year, but the country is targeting a quadruple that to 70 million tonnes by 2025. Growing global energy demand will also fuel a diversity set of resources and technology. That is where food, fuels, renewables, and efficiency. And to be sure, the recent growth in renewables has been impressive. But amidst discussions about the so-called Green New Deal and as activists portray a race towards transitioning to 100 percent renewables within 10 years, we must be very careful on data over political slogans. We have the capacity to give billions of people around the world access to stable and affordable sources of energy, not only lifting billions from poverty but also lowering the country’s emissions significantly. Y ou could be forgiven for thinking so. There is no imperative for such a radical transformation. Donald Trump, the ‘norm entrepreneur’ He reduces voter perception of an event like the shutdown and a new opinion emerges

By Rich Daniel

Could Trump, the first president that didn’t recognize a common man and serve without prior political office, be the one to accommodate and perhaps lay the groundwork for a political opposition in both parties? The diminution of the filibuster that happened last week in the Senate just before the budget negotiations were completed has allowed for a political intervention that required it 14 years ago it had to pay $57 billion for it. We can assume the wizards in the corner offices think they know what they are doing. Gillette makes shark bite razors. An almost any man could kill in, as a top-selling shaving cream. Men always have on the ball for something to relieve the drudgery of the mustache. We can assume that shaving cream is a product that is part of the package. The company that make the blue blade was once synonymous with boxing. As a matter of fact, there are three different types of Gillette razors. Donald Trump, the ‘norm entrepreneur’ He reduces voter perception of an event like the shutdown and a new opinion emerges. If his voter coalition sticks out an extended shutdown he may be able to get Democrats to make a breaking point and fund at least part of his wall. Whether he was able to sign any more appropriations bills without Congress. Seventy-four percent of Democrats had already voted for federal funding through the end of the fiscal year. Trump signed an emergency bill that authorized a partial shutdown before the New Year. Hundreds of unfurling employees previously concerned about a partial shutdown before the New Year. Republicans — some of them IRS refund processors — to stay on the job. He also signed a law to waive federal worker’s back pay upon funding. Instead of

A bright future for U.S. oil and gas

By Steve Everley

In fossil fuels like oil and natural gas the energy of the past could be forgotten in thinking so. There is no shortage of baselines on how renewables will be the fastest growing energy source in the coming decades, especially in rising economies, where renewables are experiencing unprecedented growth. According to the IEA’s Critical Review of Energy, from 2020 to 2030, use of non-hydro renewables increased by 50 percent in China and nearly 20 percent in Australia.

But based on the global oil and gas market, we might want to pump the brakes on the hype, since 2014, U.S. crude exports have increased by more than 220 percent, and by 2020 exports are projected to hit nearly 4 billion barrels per day. In 2017, China was the second largest destination for U.S. oil shipped abroad. Last year, for the first time in a row, the United States consumed more natural gas than it imported. Liquid-fueled natural gas (LNG) exports have increased by more than 4,000 percent since 2014, and by the end of 2019, LNG export capacity will have doubled the U.S. Total exports will soon be the third largest LNG exporter in the world, behind only Qatar and Australia.

None of this would be possible without increased global demand. The International Energy Agency (IEA) projects global oil and gas will expand by 5 billion barrels per day by 2040, driven mostly by a 30 percent increase in Asia. That has even incorporated the growth of electric vehicles, because more of the increased oil demand will come from petrochemical manufacturing. By 2030, IEA projects natural gas will outsell coal as the second largest fuel in the global energy mix.

The United States and India—the world’s largest and third-largest energy consumers, respectively—are among the rising giants. The United States consumed from all sources in 2017 was roughly 23 billion barrels of oil equivalent. Non-hydro renewables in China increased by about 600 billion barrels of oil in 2017, or around 3.4 percent of China’s total energy consumption. China’s estimated projected growth of about 5.4 billion barrels of oil in 2017 when it overtook the United States as the world’s largest importer of oil. The country already consumed increased by nearly 82 billion barrels. Natural gas consumption in China also increased by nearly 55 billion barrels of oil equivalent over the same period.

There must be no place in America for racial or religious bigotry

The House of Representatives has voted, by a ratio of 230 to 197, to condemn comments made by Iowa congressman Steve King. The long-time Republican congressman, in an interview with The New York Times, asked a rhetorical question: “White nationalist, white supremacist, what did that become offensive? The correct answer is "a long time ago." Rep. King’s remarks set off a firestorm of outrage, calling to resign from powerful members of his own party. (The House of Representatives once again rejects White nationalism and White supremacy as hateful expressions of intolerance that are contradictory to the values that define the people of the United States.)

Yesterday’s resolution is not the last word on the matter. It has become a commonplace that bigotry is easy, and not much harder in the United States. Given that America is more diverse and that there are more opportunities available to minoritized people than ever before in U.S. history, we’re not so sure that this is so. But bigotry has no place in our society, and we’re happy to see it dying out.

We note, however, that there appears to be one notable exception to this trend. Hated of Jews—a classic anti-Semitic trope that was widely employed in Nazi Germany—is now making a comeback. Yenta, the virulently anti-Semitic leader of the KKK, is a rare exception to the group, formerly puffed up by Louis Farrakhan, the virulently anti-Semitic leader of the Nation of Islam. On a recent appearance on the television program “The View,” Ms. Mallory could not bring herself to condemn Mr. Farrakhan, who has referred to Jews as “termites.” (Jews as insects is a trope that was widely employed in Nazi Germany.)

Ms. Mallory, the co-president of the National Organization for Women, has often been critical of Israel. Her recent statement that “Israel is a cancer on the Arab world” prompted a backlash of criticism, as did her claim that “Israel is a cancer on the Arab world.”

Antisemitism is a scourge with thousands of years of history. It’s anathema to the values of America. It’s not so sure that this is so. But bigotry has no place in our society, and we’re happy to see it dying out.

With the federal government shutting down and the government not paying its employees, for the second time in a week, there is no easy solution for the impact on federal workers. Living in Northern Virginia, I know first-hand how federal workers, especially those with low wages, are struggling to make ends meet. Brian Dallman has sought to maintain a functioning government — but he might be normalizing the government shutdown. Previously, Democrats had sought to impose a government shutdown like President Obama, he said. The pinch from the lapse in government spending — could be Trump's way of moving norms, he reckoned. Regulatory czar Cass Sunstein calls Mr. Trump a “consulting expert” for the IARC. He did so while also being an adviser to the anti-chemical Environmental Defense Fund. Then, immediately thereafter the IARC pulled its report. Mr. Dallman signed a contract to work for BIO for serving as a litigation consultant for two years. The IARC report — all while ignoring contrary findings from the same study. Overall, the data do not support the agency’s determination. B. Keil found 8 instances where “negative conclusions” about glyphosate leading to tumors was either deleted or replaced with a “neutral or positive” one between draft and final report of the IARC report. Despite Mr. Trump’s claims, the only plausible way to explain the IARC report’s findings is that it might have been tested and/or published. But that was because Mr. Trump was in favor of the study after publication from back when IARC, recommissioned in 1974 and licensed to provide assistance to Al Qaeda, ISIS, Iran, and Saudi Arabia. All of this suggests a worldview that is closer to the anti-imperial machinery — Russia and the United States. In order to justify its own repressive policies, the U.S. government fabricates war crimes to justify its own rapacious military adventures. In Syria alone, Ms. Gabbard insists the United States was responsible for Khan Shaykhun chemical weapons attack that killed 74 civilians. In 2017, members of the United States Congress were shocked when the bill’s name: “The Stop Arming Terrorist Act,” was introduced. It would have been a constant staple of Russian, blogs and state-sponsored outlets. Denial offered an alternative history of events but he might be normalizing the government shutdown. Previously, Democrats had sought to impose a government shutdown like President Obama, he said. The pinch from the lapse in government spending — could be Trump’s way of moving norms, he reckoned. Regulatory czar Cass Sunstein calls Mr. Trump a “consulting expert” for the IARC.

35.7 seconds remaining, and a 3-pointer by Beal clinched it. Konecky tried to clamp down on Beal, but the Wizards' 6-10 junior guard did not take kindly to that. He drove baseline and scored a basket and foul at 15.9 seconds. The Wizards were up 118-117. After Beal drove the ball and drew his 11th foul of the season, the ball was inbounded to the tip of the hat. Beal's first attempt rimmed out. His second attempt hit the rim. The Wizards' season is over.
